Field of the Invention This invention is in the field of capture of fish fry, particularly catfish, in a manner that allows for harvesting without totally separating the fish from the bottom, or otherwise causing the fish to remain in its “comfortable” position. 2. Description of Related Art During the harvest of fish fry, the fish must first be removed from the bottom so they can be captured, sorted, and placed on a scale for weighing. In the past, in order to harvest fish fry, a submergence capture trap, commonly known as a bottom-fish-in-a-box, was used. When using a bottom-fish-in-a-box, a fish would be trapped in a box that was at least partially submerged. The box would then be removed from the water, and the fish would be cut off of the bottom and transferred to the box for weighing. In the process of grabbing the fish from the bottom, the fish were not necessarily restricted
