London, July 14 (ANI): According to new research, British women are more comfortable drinking wine in comparison to their female counterparts in the United States. The survey, published by the Huffington Post, also said that women in the UK drink the most wine out of those surveyed, with more than 80 per cent of ladies admitting to having had a glass of wine or a taste of spirits at least once a year. In contrast, fewer than 50 per cent of women in the U.S. drank wine at least once a year, and a whopping 76.7 per cent of American women said they never drank wine. The survey, which was based on responses from 50,000 women and posted on the Huffington Post website, questioned some of the most popular forms of food and drink in the world. The survey found out that in the U.S., 75 per cent of women eat a lot of burgers or barbeque, 37 per cent snack on French fries and pizza remains the most popular snack. A similar number of women in the U.S. and the UK said they watch a lot of TV, with British women watching an average of three hours and ten minutes a day and Americans watching four hours and thirty-seven minutes. An overwhelming 86 per cent of both women in the U.S. and the UK eat a lot of pizza, 66 per cent of women in the U.S. snack on chips and 79 per cent of British women eat a lot of fast food. (ANI) Trump vs. the Other Guys by Dave Itzkoff Esquire Trump vs. the Other Guys by Dave Itzkoff Esquire / When Donald Trump announced his run for president, it prompted his biggest primary opponent to declare himself the real Republican candidate and a supporter of the sitting president. That opponent was George W. Bush, who announced that he was not endorsing Trump before a rally in Bush's hometown of Midland, Texas. Months later, it's even more surreal: Donald J. Trump, the first person to mount an outsider-run candidacy for the presidency, will be Trump's chief rival. In the modern world of endless digital information, sometimes a broken jukebox on a deserted street corner makes all the difference. As a huge fan of both kiai and cars, I had to share this video of someone doing a good ol' fashioned battle of the bands. I've longed for a time
