At this year's E3, Ubisoft announced that it is producing an Assassin's Creed game for the Switch. On the same day, you'll likely be able to buy Assassin's Creed: Black Flag on the Nintendo Switch at its launch in November. According to the Assassin's Creed: Black Flag: The Complete Legend, the game was originally going to be released last year, but was delayed. "In December 2018, the game was originally scheduled for release worldwide on Nintendo Switch on November 29, 2018. However, due to the large amount of content that was created specifically for this version, it was decided to delay its release and release it in November 2019." The game is coming to the Switch, Xbox One and PS4, but it's only coming to the Switch. And don't forget, Black Flag's successor, Assassin's Creed: Valhalla, will be released in November 2020, so there's still plenty of time to play the game. We'll have more on this story as it develops.

Profile: Graham Darby
Geraint Hughes The Premiership side have been linked with a double swoop with Victory set to be keen on the pair as they battle for the race for a top four spot In 2010 Graham Darby was named the PFA Player of the Year after a superb season with Fulham in which he scored 22 goals from 32 appearances. With Danny Murphy and Clint Dempsey suffering injuries, Darby stepped up to lead the Fulham attack and after a season at Craven Cottage, he was shipped out on loan to West Brom and Bolton. However, the fans were delighted to see him move back to the Fulham team and he started the 2011/12 campaign on the road again. However, he struggled to recapture his form at Craven Cottage and after one season at Bolton, he again found himself on the move in a £3.5million move to Norwich. However, a season at Carrow Road and now in London with QPR was not what the 32-year-old wanted, with him feeling he was wasting his time in the Championship. And Darby has finally found a club in which he will be a key member of and with his QPR career looking to have a full circle, the London club will be hoping they can move for him in the January transfer window
