About us Our web site provide lots of free software downloads for Windows, Mac, the reviews are written by the author of the software, but you can also share your thoughts about the software reviews here. On the Orientation, Composition, and Orientation of Axons in the Porifera: An Interpretation of the Geographical Distribution of Their Placodes. The organization of the nervous system within Porifera (sponges) is not clearly known, although it has been suggested that axons are directed to different parts of the body (Esch et al. 1970; Matz and Etzel 1972). It has been suggested that p75, a polypeptide antigen of ca. 75 kDa, is strongly expressed by nervous cells in sponges (Pernice-Lichy et al. 1994), and that it is part of a molecular antigen complex of the p75 neurite-associated glycoprotein. Here, we have shown that the distribution pattern of p75 immunoreactivity is homogeneous in sponges by means of immunohistochemistry. Surprisingly, we observed a gradient of p75 immunoreactivity which indicates that p75-positive neurites are axons of the Porifera.

By means of immunoelectron microscopy we have shown that p75 is associated with the inner layer of the plasma membrane of the perikaryon of the Porifera. This may indicate that p75 is a neurite-associated glycoprotein found in the nervous system of Porifera. In the tunicate Ciona, immunoelectron microscopy has shown that the outer perikaryon is devoid of immunoreactivity for p75, suggesting that the outer layer of the plasma membrane of the perikaryon is devoid of this antigen. In addition, some epidermal cells of Ciona have been shown to be p75 immunoreactive. This suggests that p75 is an antigen present in both nervous and non-nervous tissue of Porifera and that p75 may be expressed by epidermal cells.// Copyright
