Glucagon-like peptide-1 (GLP-1) may play a role in the pathogenesis of type 2 diabetes. In this study, we investigated the effect of the obesity on GLP-1 clearance. The lower-body negative pressure (LBNP) technique was used to reduce splanchnic blood flow by venous pooling without changing blood pressure. GLP-1 was infused at a high dose into the portal vein of lean and obese mice, and its clearance was measured. Clearance was calculated from the change in GLP-1 concentration before and after LBNP, and from the simultaneous change in pancreatic insulin secretion. No difference was 570a42141b
