Send unlimited SMS messages for free without registering on the target phone.Q: What is the correct way to add a git tag and apply it? I need to add a git tag to my remote repository and apply it to the repository. I was told that I should use this command: git tag a_specific_tag git push --tags origin a_specific_tag:tag_name What is the difference between tag and push --tags? A: Tag is the command to create a tag (that is an object on the repository), while push --tags is the command to push a tag that you created on the remote. So in this case the difference is that you tag before pushing and not the other way around. You can use the tag command to see all tags that you have (by default the $GIT_DIR/refs/tags) and the push --tags is used to add a tag to a remote branch (you can create a new branch for the tag by replacing a_specific_tag:tag_name with a_specific_tag). This is explained in the official documentation. Q: Can a staff with a wand component be a part of the magic item list? Say, for example, that the wizard has a staff, which is otherwise a +1 wand. But now, the wizard decides that he wants the staff to be a magic item, rather than a wand. Is the staff still part of the wizard's magic item list, or are all items on the wizard's magic item list wand-specific? A: No, the staff is not a magic item. It is, however, an item of the wizard's. This should be obvious if you consider how the wizard would make his wand into a staff. Magic Item: Wand, The Wizard has a wand component with a value of 0. The item is called The Wand. It has the following properties: Components: Wand (0) The Wand can be activated for an hour and cast a spell slot 1. It can be used to cast spells. It does not count as a component. Also note that: Magic Items: The Wand is magical. When The Wand is affected by a magic spell or a magical effect, it becomes magical. If the wand is, instead, a magic item with a wand component, such as a staff,
