Effect of alcohol intake and heavy drinking on semen parameters. The influence of alcohol intake and heavy drinking on semen quality was examined in a study involving 931 men aged 20-50 years in a Midwestern city. Semen samples were obtained for analysis at home and the subjects were interviewed using a questionnaire about frequency and quantity of alcohol intake and about a variety of risk factors for sexual dysfunction. Of the 931 men, 23.4% had consumed alcohol at least weekly and 47.3% had been drinking frequently during the previous 6 months. According to the questionnaire, 32.5% had alcohol consumption of less than eight drinks per week. The mean number of drinks per week was 6.8 +/- 4.3 and the mean percent of males reporting daily heavy drinking was 0.9 +/- 1.5%. For the 0-8 drinks/week group, the mean number of drinks per week was 6.2 +/- 4.4. In those less than four drinks per day, spermatazoa concentration (volume x sperm concentration/0.5 x 10(6) cells) was higher (p less than 0.001) and white blood cell count was lower (p less than 0.001) compared to those drinking four or more drinks per day. The difference was not found for sperm motility, percentage of abnormal forms or percent of normally formed spermatozoa. Alcohol consumption of more than four drinks per day was associated with a reduction in sperm concentration (p less than 0.001) and a greater percentage of morphologically abnormal spermatozoa (p less than 0.001) but there was no difference in the other three semen variables. These data suggest that alcohol may adversely affect sperm concentration and the number of normal cells, and that heavy drinking is associated with a reduction in sperm concentration and an increase in morphologically abnormal spermatozoa.Perry G.
