Ava Find is a lightweight cross-platform utility built specifically for helping you perform quick searches for different files in your computer. It boasts a clean and intuitive GUI that gives users the possibility to select the drives to be searched. As soon as you type the words in the dedicated dialog, the application automatically displays the results. What's more, you can make Ava Find display the audio files, clips, installed programs or a list with the downloaded items. The results can be sorted by rank, name, location, size, type, as well by the date when the files were created, modified or last accessed. You can open the audio and video files with your default player, as well as perform various operations, such as copying, renaming and deleting. Plus, it is possible to select the folders to be ignored during the search process and export the results to a file. Ava Find keeps an eye on the most recent file changes and displays the items in a dedicated pane. It detects the changes made to files by scanning the cache directory, and this way you have direct access to the video or songs you have just downloaded, or to other changed documents. You know the story: you watch a video on a website, then forget to write down where you watched the movie. Fast forward to years later, you hear somebody say you need to watch this video, and you search for it online. You find that your video is old and no longer exists, but you get a good laugh when you notice that the same video is on a company's site, and it is brand new. It turns out the video was uploaded years ago, but is now days old, since the company is getting new uploaders to fill their monthly quotas (the user has no clue their video will suddenly explode in views). Note - Me not being the original author of this tool is being kept from the tool creator. New version notes: - !*!
