Quality of the evidence: an evidence-based evaluation of predictors for the quality of data transferred and transcribed by the healthcare professionals in the administration of a structured interview. A quality control strategy for patient information transferred to the laboratory is essential, as many incorrect or ambiguous results may jeopardize the patient's health. The aim of this study was to evaluate the quality of patient information transferred and transcribed by the healthcare professionals administering a structured interview. This study was conducted during a 17-month period, at the two university hospital laboratories of one university hospital. We evaluated the transfer and transcription of standardized patient information (PPI). The rate of PPI with missing values was assessed. Quality of the PPI was graded according to guidelines. A total of 381 standardized PPI were evaluated. Missing values were present in 43.3% (D) for the participant and in 59.0% (M) for the interviewer. The PPI with missing values with regard to the documented form, the quality, the organization, the statement of the standardized assessment and the error rate were graded with the highest proportion of missing values in D (37.7, 56.7, 33.3, 37.1, 40.0, respectively). The failure rate for the transfer and transcription was significantly lower in M versus D. The evaluation of transfer and transcription showed significant differences between D and M. Transfer and transcription of standardized PPI is essential for the laboratory. The evaluation of transfer and transcription by the healthcare professionals is an important step in quality control programs.

1. Technical Field The present invention relates to an electrochromic composite, electrochromic device comprising the composite and an electrochromic system, such as vehicle window glass comprising the device. The present invention also relates to a method for preparing the composite.
