(AFP) Iraqi forces have managed to expel ISIS from the eastern villages of Tal Afar and Shaddadi and several surrounding areas, the Iraqi Prime Minister Haider al-Abadi declared on Sunday. According to Abadi, Iraqi forces are fully operational in the northern and central parts of the country, and they are ready to launch more offensives in the coming days. He also added that the final phase of the operation to liberate the regions of Qaim and Rawa, located in western Iraq near the Syrian border, is under way. The Iraqi prime minister stressed that victory against ISIS has come in favor of the "Arabs and Muslims who suffer terrorism". "The terror group will be finished with only God's mercy," he said. Abadi also pointed out that the liberation of Mosul will take some time, due to the number of ISIS fighters still located in the city. Despite this fact, Abadi said that the retaking of Mosul will be done within a "very short period". "The liberation of Mosul will not take longer than 12 months," Abadi explained, without giving specific details. According to Abadi, the Iraqi forces will continue fighting the ISIS militants located in the western regions of Anbar province, and will retake the areas in Qaim and Rawa within a few weeks. The Prime Minister also said that a coalition of Iraqi forces, backed by the US-led international coalition, which started back in August, is ready to ensure the safety of the Iraqi refugees. Abadi insisted that the American forces have been working with the Iraqi forces

"with the mission of eliminating terror" and added that it is their
