India is the world's largest food importer, with at least a fifth of its overall imports coming from the US. In a bid to reduce its trade deficit with the world's largest economy, India has warned it might raise import duties on American products such as corn and soybeans, a move that would be a politically risky move for New Delhi and could trigger retaliatory measures. "We will look at the entire range of issues which are in front of us," India's Commerce Minister Piyush Goyal told reporters in New Delhi on Monday. "We are looking at the possibility of tariff hikes as well." India is the world's largest food importer, with at least a fifth of its overall imports coming from the US. New Delhi wants to lower imports from the US, a major supplier of energy and a key market for Indian IT services, a top source of growth for the country. The country's trade deficit with the US rose 19.52 percent to $20.5 billion in the first five months of the current fiscal year. The figure in the April-June period was the highest since 2014. India's stockpiling of up to $8 billion of grain is a direct response to rising oil prices, which have widened the trade deficit, increasing the country's reliance on imports. India has moved away from a previously drafted US-initiated framework for a trade pact, known as the "permanent normalisation of ties" (PNTR). Most of the US, which is New Delhi's third largest trading partner, has been cool towards the idea since Prime Minister Narendra Modi came to power, after the two countries pulled out of the proposed deal. "Instead of moving towards a trade agreement, we are moving in the opposite direction," Goyal said. India has been a target of trade war-like rhetoric from US President Donald Trump. Earlier this year, Goyal said India would not be rushed into a trade pact with the United States. "It will be done only when we are 100 percent ready," he said. "We are prepared to reach out to Washington and make this happen when the time is ripe." Q: How does delete

Did you know that most of our users are student? Do you want to be student too?Q: Using the same cursor for different tables in the same query I have a query that needs to return all the information contained in table1, table2, table3 and table4. If I run the query at the prompt, this works fine: SELECT tbl.col1, tbl.col2, tbl.col3, tbl.col4 FROM table1 tbl LEFT JOIN table2 tbl2 ON tbl2.fk = tbl.pk LEFT JOIN table3 tbl3 ON tbl3.fk = tbl.pk LEFT JOIN table4 tbl4 ON tbl4.fk = tbl.pk; However, if I create the following in my stored procedure, create proc xyz as BEGIN select tbl.col1, tbl.col2, tbl.col3, tbl.col4 FROM table1 tbl LEFT JOIN table2 tbl2 ON tbl2.fk = tbl.pk LEFT JOIN table3 tbl3 ON tbl3.fk = tbl.pk LEFT JOIN table4 tbl4 ON tbl4.fk = tbl.pk; END; the query does not return any information. I have tried the following, but it does not work CREATE PROCEDURE xyz as BEGIN set nocount on; select tbl1.col1, tbl1.col2, tbl1.col3, tbl1.col4 into #tab1 from table1 tbl1 set nocount off; select tbl2.col1, tbl2.col2, tbl2.col3, tbl2.col4 into #tab2
