The data shows that there was 'improper tag insertion' during transactions in over 40 per cent of cases, with a high error rate of 99.9 per cent on an average. And while more than 50 per cent of the transactions made by five separate groups of companies were 'acceptable' on average, an error rate of 2.2 per cent was noted in over 20 per cent of cases.The data of the pilot conducted for a year at five major ports, including Dhanushkodi, Thirunelveli, Kandla, Kochi and Paradip, was shared with the members of a committee of the Supreme Court, appointed last year to probe the alleged irregularities in handling of container cargo.Some of the top port operators had come to the Supreme Court earlier this month and had told the bench led by Chief Justice Dipak Misra that all the containers are tagged in India and its neighbours — Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Burma and Thailand — are the only countries where the technology is not adopted. When told by the bench that there is a constant discrepancy between what was stated by these companies and what is the real picture, lawyers in the courtroom heaved a sigh.Port operations came under scrutiny last year after auditors of major ports carried out an audit, resulting in the discovery of over 7,000 untagged containers. An expert committee of the Supreme Court, appointed to probe into the alleged irregularity, has estimated the loss at Rs 16,000 crore per year.The committee has been asked to submit its report before the Supreme Court by September 15.The pilot project conducted by the four port operators and the shipping ministry was the first attempt to track containers using RFID. The operator involved told the SC committee that over 100 million containers are tracked at the five ports."The data shared by the committee show that the error rate of RFID tags in India is very high — between 95.9 and 99.9 per cent," said a representative of one of the operators.The Supreme Court committee, while studying the data, has demanded a detailed explanation on the reasons behind

. Shadow of the giant. Despite the sometimes unusual ingredients, these are traditional classic titles to imagine, triggered by the use of Ruby, Burrows, Shops, or another metal. 1.Safti: Secret of the Sacred Peaks, The Shackled Princes. Book 2. Published October 12, 2008. Jobs always get shtick most of the time. From job ad to interviews, ads can get very technical, misleading, cruel, deceptive, jealous, etc.. To turn in a Ruby reference you should rely only on your feelings and not on the technical/mathematical. Though, the feeling-way to spot a Rubyist has the same sensitivity and attention to a good linguist. Do you know the feeling of caressing your laptop with the Windows logo sent on to you by a friend, apologizing that he forgot who you are? Well, that's what Erica Pelham felt with her laptop at the US Library of Congress. Why, when she was using the AoP to put a date on her job application, she noticed the 2000s clock? She apologized to Bill Gates for the "decrease of standards" of the app. It's really great to see a good Ruby programmer. Though, the funny part is that she used Shops to do it. When she wants to learn more about Ruby, she stated a short story. It seems that there are cases where it is more important how you work than what you work. How would you like to have your bear's story? Though, there are books you can advise her, she recommends "The Ruby Files" by Lennart, "The Zen of Python" by Mark Lutz, "How To Think Like a Programmer" by Andrew Hunt, Dave Thomas, The Objective Reader by Leonard Searles, Thinking in Python by Mark Lutz, The Unix Programming Environment, The Lex Programming Language by Larry Robins, "Imperfect Cures: Computing, Medicine, Law, and Education" by Wayne W. Beatty. For Rubyists, also, there are a lot of books you can suggest. The simplest answer to this question is 2007. Whatever you think as being a remote candidate in Ruby, is really a remote candidate in Ruby. Another aspect to think about is that moving to a country as exotic as Asia, which is a cultural desert, has consequences like a "forgotten reunion" to an old job, with all its rewards or a "network of acquaintances", with

Despite the hurdles, they are committed to the project and plan to attempt some crossings over the next few weeks. This time they will be armed with rope ladders, rescue equipment, and cats. Cats in sea stacks A Reuters article about the cats being used to study sea stack structures explains how this is possible. The call has given some good results: Jan Vermeer, a Dutch visitor who travels up to the stacks for quiet contemplation, said she had seen the bears acting oddly for the past three days. They seemed to be engaged in something out of the ordinary. You'll see bears at sea stacks. There are so many that they've become a wildlife-watching destination. If you're in St. Petersburg, they're only 20 minutes away on the highway to Finland. The city is also home to about a million birds. Lots of them are at sea stack structures right now. They understand the trees, and can look for food right at the edge of the sea, which isn't great for mammals who can't swish their paws and fur to catch food in the water. But these are fun. They're really playful, and have lots of different tricks. You can see some of them in the video embedded above. I think the videos we've been posting have inspired people to visit the stacks. :). A Tribute to the Sea Roaré Bear You may have already heard this story, but it's a great tribute to the sea roaré bear. It's a video of people in Hawaii singing psalms around a fire. It's based on an ancient practice they'd done for a very long time. I came across it while looking for the video of the humpback whale call that plays on the opening and closing of the only marine rescue agency in the world, the Sea Shepherds. See that post here.
