Can anyone explain the following behavior and, if possible, point me to an article/tutorial? I have an app that is meant to have a form with a couple of buttons that call some methods that have nothing to do with the form or buttons. But when I run it, it doesn't show the main form. However, if I add a one-line print statement to the end of the main() method it shows the form. Sample code: public class FormMain { public static void main(String[] args) { System.out.println("Input command: "); Scanner scan = new Scanner(System.in); String input = scan.nextLine(); if ("close".equalsIgnoreCase(input)) { System.exit(0); } System.out.println("no"); } } This is an extremely simple app that is supposed to show a dialog. It was NOT a GUI app before; I recently added a dialog. If I run the above code without the line at the end, it exits immediately, as if I was pressing enter on the input line of the dialog. Adding the line causes it to stay on the input prompt and loop; it just terminates when I type "close". Why is this happening? A: While I am not 100% sure of this, I think the reason this is happening is because System.exit() will exit the entire program. As for the difference with a simple print statement, I believe that
