These cell populations are thought to be playing a part in the pathophysiology of bronchial asthma, but current knowledge of their exact role is limited. Evidence to suggest that eosinophil-activating agents and neutrophils are important in the pathogenesis of bronchial asthma has been found mainly by studying the effects of acetylcholine, histamine and exercise in animals in which the eosinophils or neutrophils have been depleted or both depleted. Eosinophils appear to be important in both antigen- and non-antigen-induced airways inflammation, whereas neutrophils seem to be essential for antigen-induced airway inflammation. Exercise induces bronchoconstriction and airways inflammation both in asthmatics and in normal subjects. The features which are of importance in this type of asthma are a decrease in bronchial patency, an increase in airway resistance and prolonged airway inflammation. The exercise-induced airways inflammation in asthmatics is of the same type as that in normal subjects, while the resistance increases are similar to those observed after allergen challenge. The early increase in airways resistance to inhaled histamine is of the same magnitude in asthmatics and in normal subjects when measured while breathing through the nose. The later resistance increase is similar to that observed in normal subjects. Thus, airways resistance to inhaled histamine increases more markedly in normal subjects than in asthmatics when subjects are challenged with histamine either by causing bronchoconstriction or through inhalation.(ABSTRACT TRUNCATED AT 250 WORDS)Q: What is the use of "do_" method in an Objective-C class? I know that the do_ method is used in an Objective-C class to write some private methods that are accessible only to that class. But is there any purpose to use this method? A: The do_ method is an implementation detail. But it can serve many purposes. Sometimes it is a placeholder for a method which is added in later, or a placeholder for a

PASSES[The roles of P-glycoprotein in lymphoma cell resistance to anticancer drugs]. The purpose of this study was to investigate the role of multidrug resistance proteins in the multidrug resistant (MDR) phenotype of malignant lymphoma. Expression of P-glycoprotein (P-gp), a ATP-binding cassette transporter, and rhodamine 123 uptake in lymphoma cell lines were examined by using flow cytometry and in vitro fluorescence assay. MTX, the substrate and inducer of MDR, was not a substrate of P-gp. Although vincristine (VCR) can be extruded by MDR mediated by P-gp, little change in the side distribution of MTX in MDR cells was recognized compared to adriamycin (ADM) in MDR cells. Rhodamine 123 (Rh123) which has an indirect relation with P-gp was not transported by P-gp. The results indicate that acquisition of MDR phenotype was not entirely due to P-gp mediated transport mechanism. The targets for drug action were possibly not the same in MDR cells. It is suggested that drug resistance in malignant lymphoma is multifactorial.
