Q: How to grep on the specific version of the file in shell script? I have multiple files. They have versions of the same filename but with different version numbers in the end. My task is to grep on a filename but check the version number to see if it exists or not. If it does not exist, grep should not print it and exit; otherwise, check if the version is equal to a specific number and then print the version and exit. For example: OneFile.c.225.abc // not existed version OneFile.c.230.def // exists version OneFile.c.230.def.jkl // exists version with additional characters OneFile.c.3.xyz // exists version with a number I do not want to search on the file name as multiple files with the same name exist. For example I would like to check that if one file exists and has a version that is equal to 230. How do I do this from a shell script? For example: grep -c -f version_file version.txt grep -c -f version_file > result.txt if version_file has version 230: print version exit else: print version not found exit Could someone please give me an example of how this could be done? A: Ok, here's how it works: #!/bin/sh count=0 for file in OneFile.c.225.abc OneFile.c.230.def OneFile.c.230.def.jkl OneFile.c.3.xyz ; do if grep -q -e '230
