

“The powerful combination of real-world players and FIFA’s state-of-the-art match engine simulates every hair-raising moment of a World Cup™ final,” explained senior gameplay producer Matt Prior. “With hyperMotion technology, our game engine plays out an ultra-realistic match, complete with the dramatic team and player motions and decisions that really matter.” Shoot to Score One of the most significant changes to the mechanics of FIFA 22 compared to previous FIFA titles is that the attacking side will now be able to gain possession from dribbling right up to the final touch. The pitch is much wider and longer and players are no longer restricted to a certain area of the pitch where they can cross the ball. When the ball is headed towards the goal, players can now run towards the goal and be the one with the last touch on the ball, whether in defence or attack. In addition, dribbling is now much more fluid, so players will be able to turn and change direction more quickly and efficiently. Players can now run towards the goal and take their opponents on with them, instead of passing to them. Prior said: “When we first saw and played with the pitch we thought ‘this is going to work.’ When the ball is heading towards the goal, it’s so realistic that the player feels like he is actually there. Whether he is able to move into position, or whether he overhits it or not is up to him, it’s about feeling like he is in the area around the target. “The more dangerous a player is, the more intense the skill checks are, the more he can get away with, but the more he puts his opponents on the back foot. We have made the delivery and the drop rate in the weight of the ball to make it feel heavier and less easy, but make it such that the pressure is on the attacker to get the ball and for opponents to use their quick feet. For example, defenders will have to be aware of a player who is coming in a different angle.” Teamwork FIFA 22 introduces several new team play systems which make it easier for players to collaborate with their teammates and easier for the AI to respond to challenges. Among the key elements include: Teamplay – A new Teamplay system brings more variety to gameplay and makes the opposition easier to beat. According to
