The evolution of "HyperMotion" in FIFA is an example of the company's commitment to continuously push the boundaries of what is possible with technology and creative gameplay. "With the evolution of 'HyperMotion' in FIFA, we are able to evolve our player models using a completely different set of data and tools," said Sean O'Brien, Global Brand Director of FIFA. "With 'HyperMotion' we took a leap forward, we're not even there yet, and I'm proud of the work our teams have done to develop and implement this functionality." As the EASL and EASM League is no longer the final frontier of football's elite play, FIFA 22 will feature heightened realism and attention to detail in tackling and on-ball movement, an objective-based submission system where skill and shooting are rewarded, and new soundtrack and off-field features. HyperMotion technology supports the key gameplay changes and is the most significant advancement to the FIFA series since the introduction of Sidewalk Terrain in FIFA 17. It is one of the key pillars in FIFA 22 that sets it apart from the competition. FIFA's game engine is the most advanced ever developed by the company, allowing for incredible character and player likeness, more realistic animations and gameplay, motion-capture of player running, tackling and on-ball action, and new camera angles that create a more immersive experience for players. All-22 Broadcast and radio commentary From matches played to boots thrown, FIFA 22 delivers an intimate, all-encompassing experience unlike anything else. This feature captures real-life broadcasts such as the 2019 FIFA Club World Cup final, which included exclusive interviews and post-match analysis from global media. Now, any broadcast featuring a single match can be customized with an exclusive matchday experience. FIFA's new matchday experience takes first-time broadcast into a whole new level, and makes access to live matches easier than ever before. The new introduction to FIFA's broadcast engine is a reimagining of how to access the live stream of matches. In FIFA 22, while watching a match in progress you can choose from three unique broadcast experiences that match the intensity of your viewing experience: • "Go Live" - Select a match during a live broadcast and watch as the match unfolds
