Bruton's tyrosine kinase (Btk) is a protein tyrosine kinase (PTK) involved in B cell maturation and normal hematopoiesis. It belongs to the Tec family of PTKs, which also includes receptor-type tyrosine kinases such as the receptor for the FGF (FGF-receptor) and the platelet-derived growth factor receptor. In these PTKs, the catalytic kinase domain possesses a C-terminal Src homology (SH2) domain, which is essential for the cellular activation of the tyrosine kinase and is called the catalytic domain (CD). In an attempt to identify regions that might participate in the functions of Btk, we have analyzed its catalytic domain, including the C-terminal tyrosine kinase domain, by means of site-directed mutagenesis. The most striking modification was the replacement of Tyr450, conserved in Tec family kinases, by Phe. This residue is important for the coordination of Zn²⁺, which is a critical cofactor for tyrosine kinases. Three other tyrosine residues were also mutated (Tyr498, Tyr536, and Tyr539) by replacing them by either Phe or Glu. The mutants were expressed in a baculovirus system and tested for their ability to interact with the SH2 domains of Btk and Fgr. The results confirmed that tyros

The only way I can think of right now is to make a single socket for both unicast and multicast, and check which socket a message comes from. I would prefer to use only one socket, if possible, or it would be great if I could somehow wake a thread when I receive a message for the first time. Any ideas on how to do that? A: You might want to look at the "select" function, which is available in POSIX. To quote, from the select man page: The library defines an interface that allows the application to wait for a number of file descriptors to change state. The library provides two variants of this interface, depending on whether it is desired to specify which descriptors to watch and how many of them to watch (the classic "select" interface). The first variant, "select", requires that the application
