Conventionally, an example of a laser oscillator for generating a laser beam for irradiation used in a medical field, a manufacturing field and the like is a laser oscillator including an excitation light source for generating a first excitation light (a pulse laser) and a dye solution for providing a second excitation light (laser) to a solution is known (for example, see Patent Literature 1). The laser oscillator is characterized in that dye can be repeatedly used (dye recycling). The dye recycling is used to increase a lifetime of the laser oscillator because non-return of a wavelength of a laser beam, emitted from a laser resonator, is reduced. Further, in a dye recycling method of a conventional laser oscillator, a liquid is collectively circulated to efficiently obtain an output with high energy (to repeat a laser oscillation). In the conventional laser oscillator, a pump light source and a laser oscillation source are provided in a substantially same container or a part of a container having the liquid circulation passage is partitioned to be two independent containers. Sarisar The Sarisar () is a district in southeastern Marseille, France. Location The Sarisar district borders the districts of Bouches-du-Rhône in the north, Port-de-Ville in the west and the districts of Grasse in the east and Saint-Raphaël in the south. The district is located about a half mile from the Mediterranean Sea, and is part of the large, modern urban sprawl of Marseille. History The Sarisar neighborhood was built in the early 1960s as a new commercial centre for the city of Marseille. From the late 1970s and the 1980s, it gained prominence as the "new" center of European prostitution. In the 1990s, the Zénith de l'Etoile was built in the Sarisar to replace the old Palais de Cong 00c515b9f4 mid keyboard lagu wajib nasional.midi.zip Global industry to install 32MW of solar power by end of 2013 Gavin Hall 3 Min Read LONDON, Oct 19 (IFR) - Globally, nearly 32 MW of solar power capacity is to be added to the grid before the end of 2013. Unlike previous years, when rapid growth in solar power has been largely confined to individual countries, the European Photovoltaic Energy Association (EPIA), a trade group representing the industry, says solar power is coming. "Even the most optimistic forecasts see growth in the solar sector limited to just 20% annually, with the majority of new capacity being added to existing systems rather than in new factories," said EPIA chief executive Alain Diot. The worldwide capacity to supply power to the grid will amount to nearly 37.5 GW by the end of the year, up from 27.5 GW last year, an increase of more than 50%. Another 25.7 GW is likely to be added in 2013 by the end of the year, according to industry-group figures, which showed 75% of that total is installed in just three countries - China, the US and Japan. Meanwhile, 20% of global capacity is based in the EU, with the remainder spread across other nations, including Australia, Brazil, Chile, India, Italy, Morocco, the Philippines, South Africa, South Korea and Mexico. The new figures cover more than 40 countries. "The world is waking up to the reality that solar can no longer be relegated to fringe players in the power sector," said Mark Beach, managing director of EY's photovoltaic practice. "With good policy frameworks, good market conditions and other companies being forced into solar by competitive pressures, the established solar companies will need to commit to strategic growth to respond to the new reality," Beach said in a prepared statement. Research by Bloomberg New Energy Finance has forecast that the annual addition of solar power capacity will reach 90 GW by 2015, with most of it in China and the US. The reason solar is still relatively small at present, even in the most developed nations, is largely due to project economics, EPIA said. In places such as South Africa and Spain, for example, the cost of installing solar is already around the same level as conventional power stations. The
