What do you do when you need to enter a new contact in your Outlook Calendar, but you don't have the person's address? It's one of those times when writing the information down by hand is easy and convenient, but not the most efficient. Enter "anagram" into your system, and it will instantly read all text and characters found in any application and create a Calendar, Contact or Memo item containing the information. You're sure to get consistent results when you use anagram on any application that you send text to your Outlook address book. It's hard to find a program that is easier to use or faster than anagram, and it's hard to find a program that is this quiet. How it Works: anagram can efficiently and instantly translate the meaningful text from any application into Outlook contact, calendar, task or note items. It will even work when you are sending an email message. Because anagram uses the information from the text and symbols in the message it finds, you don't need to worry about typing in the information by hand. By using anagram, you never have to type in new address information or appointments again! What if you want to get the same text from another application? You need to copy the text, paste it into an anagram entry, and hit "Add." That's it! There's nothing more to do. You can add as many entries as needed. This is so much easier than writing down the information by hand and entering it into Outlook, which takes forever. If you are sending emails or documents containing one or more of the following symbol or data types, they will be translated to your Outlook information: • Text • Files • HTML • E-mail addresses • Phone numbers • Date/time Actions: anagram works with Outlook 97 - 2007 and Palm Desktop 3.0 or later, Agendus for Windows, Salesforce.com Enterprise Edition, NetSuite, Jigsaw and Google Calendar. It is currently in Beta stage and is still maturing. Some Known Errors: • Anagram does not work with Outlook Express and Mac Mail. • Anagram does not work with Google products. • Anagram does not work in some Internet Explorer versions. • Some applications, like Netscape Navigator, may require the user to change a setting in its options menu. • If you are using Outlook Express version 5.0 or earlier, an additional conversion routine
