In This Article:Differential transactivation of the glucocorticoid and progesterone receptor by progestins: involvement of a c-Jun/activating transcription factor-2 pathway. Although progestins are known to activate human glucocorticoid receptor (hGR) in the presence of ligand, the possibility that they can differentially transactivate progesterone receptor (PR) has not been addressed. To this aim, we examined the effect of progestins on transactivation of hGR and PR. Our findings show that (i) progesterone and medroxyprogesterone acetate (MPA) preferentially transactivate hGR with respect to PR, (ii) dimethylsulfoxide (DMSO) had a marked effect on the transactivation of hGR and PR by progestins, and (iii) in the absence of DMSO, MPA and progesterone gave rise to a different induction of the transactivation of hGR and PR. It is suggested that ligand-progestin interaction with hGR and PR, which are closely related proteins, is not identical but rather differentially directed by progestins, i.e. MPA represents a high-affinity ligand for hGR and only weakly for PR, while progesterone is a high-affinity ligand for PR and only weakly for hGR. The present invention relates to control valves, and more particularly to control valves for locking out pressure within a fluid system. Systems having a very small error between the desired and actual fluid pressure in the system produce very small forces in the system. In order to produce a large force in the system, the force should be multiplied. Thus, locking out an error in pressure in a fluid system is more difficult than locking in an error in pressure. A known control valve has at least one variable area flow control chamber in communication with a control valve body. A flow passage is formed between the control valve body and the flow control chamber. The flow control chamber has a volume which is in a constant proportion to fluid flow through the valve. The volume is at least one half the flow control chamber volume, and the volume is at least one third the flow control chamber volume. The control valve includes means for sensing a system pressure and for computing a system pressure error. A pneumatic force is generated based on the system pressure error by changing the area of the flow control chamber. The invention relates

I tried downloading this movie, but it failed. Is it an online streaming service? The movie is in English with Iso 6, which is odd for an Indian movie..
