Earl De Gray Earl De Gray (November 11, 1938 - July 30, 1996) was an American session bassist who was the bassist for the Motown group The Temptations for most of their career. He was with the band from its inception in 1967 until his death in 1996. The Temptations' most successful years were in the early to mid-1970s, and Earl De Gray's bass lines are heard on many of the group's greatest hits such as "Papa Was A Rolling Stone", "Just My Imagination", "Upside Down" and "Ain't Too Proud to Beg". De Gray was the group's only bassist for the group's first five years, and he often replaced Eddie Kendricks during Kendricks' absences. On February 19, 1970, De Gray was involved in an automobile accident that resulted in two broken legs. It was during this time that the band's keyboardist and guitarist, David T. Walker, filled in on bass while De Gray recovered. Walker remained with the group for the rest of the decade. In 1972, after a brief absence, De Gray returned to the Temptations for two years, becoming the group's permanent bassist in 1974. For the rest of the group's career, he was the only bassist with the group, although several members of the group filled in on bass while De Gray was on vacation or illness. He was released by the Temptations in 1994. On January 31, 1983, De Gray was arrested for possession of one ounce of marijuana. He was found guilty and fined $300 plus court costs. That same year, De Gray was arrested for disorderly conduct in Aiken, South Carolina. On October 11, 1983, De Gray was charged with assault and
