To analyze the relation between packed lunch food consumption and weight status among children at school entry. A cross-sectional study was performed involving a sample of 2,566 children aged 5-6 years. The height and weight were measured and the consumption frequency of lunches provided to the children was recorded through interviews with parents. Bivariate and multiple linear regression analyses were used to analyze the relation between the frequency of packed lunch consumption and height-for-age z score (HAZ), weight-for-age z score (WAZ) and overweight prevalence. A high proportion (66%) of children had received at least one packed lunch. Those who had received lunches 1 or 2 days a week (37%) had lower mean HAZ and WAZ compared with those who had received lunches on 3 or 4 days a week. The frequency of packed lunch consumption was associated with height, weight and body composition. Children who consumed packed lunch 1 or 2 days a week had higher HAZ (0.24 SD, 95% confidence interval [CI] = 0.07-0.42; and 0.20 SD, 95% CI = 0.08-0.32) and weight (2.26 SD, 95% CI = 1.44-3.08) compared with those who consumed them daily. Multiple linear regression analyses confirmed these associations. These findings suggest that the frequency of packed lunch consumption is associated with body weight status. Interventions are needed to improve the nutritional quality of lunches. Technical Field The present invention relates to a solid polymer electrolyte fuel cell and a method of manufacturing the same. 2. Background Art Among power sources and clean energy sources currently in use, a fuel cell is attracting attention as an energy supply system capable of providing a highly efficient, compact power source at a reasonable price. Fuel cells convert the chemical energy of fuel (hydrogen, methanol, and the like) to electrical energy through an electrochemical reaction. Accordingly, fuel cells have an advantage in that the system efficiency is not reduced due to the consumption of fuel, such as energy losses. Also, because the use of hydrogen gas as a fuel is unnecessary, fuel cells have an advantage in that there is no concern about hydrogen gas leaks and the risk of explosion. A solid polymer electrolyte fuel cell employs a solid polymer electrolyte membrane to uniformly conduct protons. Fuel cells usually have a laminate structure, in which the solid polymer electrolyte membrane is sandwiched between an anode and a cath
