What would you do?You could invest it into stocks, bonds or fund a research project (to make your university/company better, to make a charity better or for yourself to improve your area of expertise). ===== tectonic Investment is a bad use of this money. 1\ It's far better to use this money to build something of lasting value for society and your family. 2\ If you'd be wise with this money then just give it away, it doesn't have any real meaning to anyone in the universe. ~~~ skram I agree that investing the money in the stock market would be a bad idea; and I also agree that philanthropy is a better use of the money, but as far as #1 goes, I would allocate part of the money to putting it into a bank account that I won't touch, and give the rest to various charities. ~~~ tectonic I would allocate the entire amount to charity, most likely. ----- ggurgone No money could buy more time. For me, the first thing I would do is document it. I would buy a nice archival storage box with a jacket for my emulsion negative and a lock box for the prints. I would then take a week and go on a getaway, or possibly a few trips at a time. I would need to be really comfortable with the amount of time I would spend in the collections. ----- cpr Buy the Brooklyn Bridge. ~~~

Commentary: In a revolutionary way, Salisbury has permanently deprived the Ministry of Information of its ability to control the information flow and public opinion. It is well known that Margaret Thatcher ordered the British Broadcasting Corporation to exercise caution about broadcasting the Falklands War, which was a failure of that order. We should not forget that the government can control the airwaves in the UK, but it cannot directly control or censor the internet. A well informed Twitter user, Alec, noticed the following: Anonymous quotes from "The Good Food Guide" 21st July 2017 The last item on the first page is: However, there are many internet groups and platforms on the web that contain information that is totally free. This information can contain the same or very similar information but in different forms, and this information will be constantly updated. For example, the wikipedia.org website can be considered as an information pool of greater scope than the British Broadcasting Corporation, which is a regulated public service broadcaster for the UK. The Wikipedia website is updated by its users, who are contributors. Nis from the show Summary 7 From The Wire, this show is pretty great. Most episodes deal with a criminal, and usually they deal with a 'Dup' whose family is drug-fuelled, using criminals who have been targeted by the police to do their bidding. The "bad cop" cops (like Sanduski) try to corrupt them into becoming informers. While the "good cop" is basically just a normal person, like Lieutenant Cedric Daniels, who was a widower and became a cop to fight the drug war. He and his partner Frank Sobotka were constantly working together to bring down the drug trade, much to the disgust of the corrupt cops. Sammy the Bull is a great character, and so is Jimmy McNulty, who was a corrupt cop and later became the number-two man in the now-defunct Baltimore narcotics unit, which is where he left the D'money. Jimmy is now a coach at a high school and, in a great twist, has become a believer in the war on drugs. But when two of the main players in his life are corrupt, it is e79caf774b
