

The results of the new system are apparent in just about every facet of the game. Players react to the ball and opponents in fresh and exciting ways. Rivalry penalties lead to dramatic collisions and surprising goals. From opening up new tactical choices to delivering more fluid and natural-looking animations, FIFA 22 is all about experimentation and evolution, bridging the gap between the past and the future of sports video games. One of the most significant results of the experiment is the combination of player acceleration and player control used within HyperMotion Technology. Players can actually accelerate both themselves and the ball as they run. The improvements in player control are thanks to deep coaching and AI research. The former features new "programming" that makes it easier for players to use the ball and teammates within their natural speed. This is what has been dubbed "Speedball 2.0." For example, a player can apply pressure to a defender by increasing his speed, and the opponent will then typically slow down to adjust to the opponent's pace. FIFA 22 also introduces a new defensive behavior known as the "Pivot 360." This is a new, 360-degree defensive technique that gives the player a better idea of the position of the opposing players and an improved awareness of which side of the ball is in play. Players will now pull up and pivot when sprinting towards the ball. FIFA 22 also introduces the Dynamic Entry System (DES). There are three options within the DES system: Defense. This is a new, player-activated defensive behavior in which a player deflects the ball away from the opponent. Tackle. This is an optional, player-controlled defensive behavior where a player enters the tackle of an opponent. Pick and Roll. This is a new, player-activated defensive behavior in which a player intercepts an opponent's pass or dribble inside the penalty area. As with the older Pivot 360 defensive system, the new elements together create a more complete, tactical defensive response. As well as the new challenges in defense, FIFA 22 introduces the Dynamic Entry System (DES). There are three options within the DES system: Defense. This is a new, player-activated defensive behavior in which a player deflects the ball away from the opponent.
