An old temple is infested with crazy creatures that are destroying the area. Your job is to go inside the temple, get your pick, and escape while being careful to avoid dangerous traps and deadly monsters. It is easy to get lost in such a place, so take time to explore, don't forget to collect the orbs and level up along the way. Because there is no time limit to explore, you can travel anywhere you like. There are no enemies to eliminate, the only danger is the traps that might accidentally catch you and lead you to your death. What Do You Need To Play Brightness? What's new:

Announced Announced at the weekend are some truly great bonus materials from the September 2009 issue of Game Informer. Included as pre-order bonus content is a 134 page visual presentation of American Nightmare that covers the game in all its 23+ hours of neverending gameplay! Once again game makers over at Remedy Entertainment are out proving that they are the cream of the crop. The guys at Remedy have more then proven their worth. I just hope Forg to everyone here who considers themselves a true fan of this game and don't believe this game is a rip off. I try to approach the story without reading online. The full map of the base was never in the game. There isn't even an official story for this game. The full map of the base was never released to the public. All we have are the in-game hints given by Jensen, till one of the guys on the community boards gave 1,000 hints and now all of the base area has been released. What would make a game with so many secrets a rip-off if you don't know all the secrets? OK, so I read the interviews and the wikis and forums and although they are in a lot of places pretty bad quality, this is a very interesting story and what if these answers were released early before the game was even released. As far as being played, I am a fan. I love the game, and I love the Easter eggs. i agree jensen was just lying - " I made up a million reasons for why he was at a certain place". that messed his mind up so much he started to believe he was a real world detective. he even turned the coke trays up side down, pretending to drink a coke. WTF? Forg I'm sorry in the long run if you are unhappy with your gaming experience, we don't take you for granted here at GI. You are treated like a gift. You have been angry at your fan base for who knows how long and you continue to spew this bile with no regard for the feelings of those you claim to be fans of. You come out in the morning and blurg, us some western wise guy attitude and start trash talking Johansson. How could you love gamers so much if you hated them so much? This is one of the reasons I gave up reading GI. Too much vitriol spew
