Copy the file. with their parasite fauna. The first detailed account of the parasite fauna of L.latescrippa in this area is presented in [B1]. For the purpose of comparison, the tissue infestation pattern of G. vermicularis, G. duodenalis and N. americanus in Portugal was examined ([B1]). The distribution and the incidence of the trematodes and cestodes of fish from the Lagoa de Doce River was investigated. The species from the genus Catostomus were the most frequently sampled fish ([@B1]; [@B2]). In this work, we present the information about the parasite species found in the fish L. latescrippa from the Lagoa de Doce River basin. LAGOA DO CEDRO (SP) is an endemic area for schistosomiasis and echinococcosis. The prevalence of these diseases is 33.6% and 11.9%, respectively ([@B9]; [@B6]). [@B8] reported a seroprevalence of 20% (28/142) for Schistosoma mansoni. Farmed fish from the Lagoa de Doce (SP) were collected and examined for intestinal parasites. A total of 58 adult fishes were analysed. Fish were collected alive in the wild and were weighted and examined for their external morphology. The L.latescrippa is considered edible and its commercial production is on the increase ([@B7]). The fish were kept in water at 4-6°C. The parasites were found in 52 fish (90.5%) including 40 wild-caught specimens (100%) and 12 farmed ones (88.9%).
