It's very short, maybe a hundred pages, easy to read, I think. I read it in my early twenties, a long time ago. The main message of this book is that every business has a myth, one that, if not properly understood, leads to failure. The main techniques of the book, as I remember, are to create a business plan and put it on paper. A business plan is a kind of contract which clearly states what you are trying to do. I bought the book for a while and read it, but haven't read it in a long time. I think I'm missing some of the finer points of this book as I see it. Actually, I'm curious about some things that I did read which may be problematic. When I first read this book, I was in business already and was having a hard time in my business. I was looking for answers. This was one of the few books I read then. My own difficulty was with having a lot of promise, but not knowing how to make money. I looked at the myth and saw that every business has one. And this one was centered around selling. Sell. Sell. Sell. Sell. These are the main ingredients. So, I looked at my business and what I did. I wanted to go out and sell. In my business, selling is all that I do. I ran a business to sell but that's not what the myth said. I set up a sales help desk, but didn't do anything else, at all. Did this book really focus on helping people decide what they wanted to do with their lives? No, it gave a lot of suggestions, mostly about selling. I still read the book, maybe twenty years later, but it made no impression on my attitude in any measurable way. I have a lot of experiences to share with my community
