The man was walking at Lakeside Park Tuesday evening and said a bat flew in his face, according to the county's Bureau of Animal Control. He turned away from the bat to secure it with his hand, and the bat bit him, according to the report. The man is a friend of the Allegheny County Rescue Resource Team. A white tipi in a separate park, where a woman was mauled by a pit bull, is being cleaned up after 60 percent of the dogs were euthanized, Assistant Chief Brian Allen of the city's Law Department said. The woman was hospitalized last week after she was mauled by several dogs in the park. Allen said the city had 2,500 dogs roaming freely across the county this time of year, but that the amount of dogs are being reduced because city animal control officers are spending more time capturing dogs and euthanizing them.Traditional methods of garment manufacture include cutting, sewing, and assembly processes. In some high-volume garment manufacturing processes, sewing machines are used to create customized assemblages of stitching. During manufacture, one or more raw fabric pieces are assembled at a cutting table into a final garment by joining fabric portions (generally referred to as "interlock stitches") by stitching. The cutting table holds the fabric pieces in position while a sewing machine creates the interlock stitches at desired locations on the fabric. The type and speed of stitching is controlled by a number of factors, such as the type and weight of stitching, the dimensions of the various parts of the final garment, and the type of thread being used. Advances in automated machines, combined with the wide availability of silk and synthetic
