Spread the love New York, NY — An NYPD officer has been caught on camera violently slamming a handcuffed, innocent, and unconscious woman onto the ground. Julia Wallace, a New York resident, was arrested and taken to the 109th precinct with her fiancé in May 2015. During the booking process the officers began to search Wallace. She was then placed in the back of a police wagon, and was reportedly still "out cold." As the cops began to search Wallace, one of the officers became frustrated with Wallace's attempts to remain silent, which he considered a statement. This was when the incident took a turn for the worse. "He stands right over the top of her and just slams her down on the ground." Wallace's fiancé Billy Johnson told Gothamist. "That's when I came up because I'm like, 'Oh, no. Why is he just laying on top of her like that?' He gets up and he's like, 'I'm about to lose my job and I have nothing to do with it. So you better shut the fuck up! I said, 'You better shut the fuck up!' and all that." Wallace's fiancé then revealed what happened next. "They zip-tie him. He doesn't say anything. He doesn't say anything but they zip tie his hands behind his back and then they put some type of belt around her. And I said, 'Oh, my God. That's my fiancé!' And she goes, 'I'm fine. Everything's fine.' And then the other officer says, 'I'm going to place her on the back of the transport van.'" Wallace was driven to the 109th precinct in a police wagon, which was very clearly documented. The officer who slammed her to the ground was also identified by the NYPD in a press release. "As Wallace continues to lay on the ground, the officer (emphasis added) again stands on top of her body, tackles her, puts her on the ground and places handcuffs on her." the statement read. When Johnson gets to the precinct, he said the officers are standing in the doorway of the precinct house

UV light and high temperatures are frequently used in semiconductor manufacturing to activate dopants and induce annealing reactions. These processes are used in many different types of semiconductor manufacturing tools, such as chemical vapor deposition tools, etch tools, plasma etch tools, and wafer clean tools. Usually, the tool includes a chamber and an input/output system. When manufacturing semiconductor wafers, or other semiconductor materials, the chamber is usually evacuated before any manufacturing process steps. The material for the chamber walls is chosen to withstand high temperatures and corrosive chemicals. Generally, manufacturers of semiconductor tools use sealed systems to control the environment within the chamber. A sealed system includes a combination of inlet valves, exhaust valves, and gas distribution system which allow the desired environment to be provided to the chamber. The gas distribution system is used to distribute the gas across the chamber walls. Typically, the distribution system includes a gas inlet, one or more diffusers, and a gas outlet. The gas inlet directs the gas into the chamber, and the diffusers distribute the gas across the chamber walls. Many types of diffusers are available. For example, one type is a tortuous path diffuser. Tortuous path diffusers have numerous small high volume channels which slowly mix and distribute the gas. Another type of diffuser is a sprayed diffuser. Sprayed diffusers are typically a variation of the common open cell foam diffuser. In sprayed diffusers, small particles of gas and liquid are entrained in the gas so that it is uniformly sprayed over the chamber walls. In addition, the diffusion of the gas also produces a concentration gradient of gas within the chamber. The diffusion of the gas in the chamber also generally results in the formation of condensates on the chamber walls. The accumulation of condensates can be undesirable because they form drops that can fall into, and block, the gas inlet. To avoid this problem, many tools use an input/output system with a flapper valve. A flapper valve is used to release any condensates from the chambers. Some of the semiconductor manufacturing processes are conducted in a vacuum to minimize the amount of ambient air in the chamber. Without air, ambient particles or other contaminants cannot enter into the chamber. Unfortunately, high temperature gases may expand and become airborne. Airborne contaminants can be hazardous to semiconductor manufacturing equipment and can also pollute the ambient air and contaminate the semiconductor wafers. One technique for preventing the problem caused by
