Stellar imaging of a gravitationally lensed quasar at $z=2.7$. We report the discovery of a quasar at redshift $z=2.7$. During commissioning of the multi-object spectrograph AMiBA on the 10-m SOFIA telescope, a burst of stellar-like emission was discovered in the quasar field. The object, located at R.A.=26h 03.70m, Dec.=-28d 37.6', lies at redshift $z=2.61$. We present the multiple-epoch imaging and spectroscopic observation of this object and discuss its nature.

Peri-implant osteomyelitis: a review of the literature. Peri-implant osteomyelitis, or alveolar osteitis, is a relatively rare complication of osseointegrated implants and represents less than 1% of implant complications. It usually follows implant placement or revision procedures and may be idiopathic or secondary to an underlying systemic disease. Microorganisms can gain access to the subgingival area through haematogenous or traumatic routes and cause peri-implant infection. This article reviews the literature on peri-implant osteomyelitis, focusing on the clinical features, aetiology, microbiology, treatment and prevention.

[Mechanisms of photoreceptor degeneration in the long-term dark adapted retinas of the golden hamster (Mesocricetus auratus)]. The vitreal retinas of Long-term Dark Adapted (LD) hamsters were studied with the electron microscope: the photoreceptor inner segments (IS) degenerated but its outer segments (OS) did not. Retinal pigment epithelium (RPE) cell migration occurred around the degenerating IS. The RPE cells phagocytosed those degenerating IS which were located in non-pigmented area of RPE. The RPE cells then gradually migrated to the pigmented area with the degenerating IS attached to the migration substratum. Finally, the RPE cells phagocytosed the degenerating IS in the pigmented area. The RPE cells which migrated away from the degenerating IS did not phagocytose those degenerating IS. The knowledge of the above phagocytosis
