A: This is one of the more difficult posts to answer as it requires a significant amount of understanding of how encryption works. Here's my best educated guess: Your decryption key never leaves your computer, therefore the key is known to the hacker(s). Therefore, assuming this is an encrypted file, these values for the encryption key must be known. Therefore, these values are going to be used in a small program that "does a lot of things" with them. All programs must have a startup code that runs before the program is opened. When you launch this program, it performs a set of steps and at some point, it will output the decrypted text to the file. The output of this program is the decrypted text to the file. The fact that you can't
