You can have a virus sometimes...The present invention is directed to a vane-type pump having a housing provided with a suction inlet and a discharge outlet with circumferential ribs for dividing the discharge outlet into vane compartments. The housing further includes at least one axially oriented counterbore for a shaft-like drive element which is designed for driving an axially oscillating rotor element. The rotatable rotor element engages with the shaft-like drive element and also serves to guide the vane compartmented and movable segment of the rotor element out of the circumferential ribs so that the oscillating vanes are not blocked by the ribs. Vane-type pumps of this type are often equipped with a rotor element having a hollow cylindrical form with axially oriented thrust bearings for the rotor element in the suction inlet region and a suction outlet opening on a top side. The drive element, which has a conical form and extends upward from the rotor element, is also cylindrical and is supported at its underside by a plate-like diaphragm. In the case of vane-type pumps having a multi-stage configuration, the rotor element can be divided into several individual rotor element segments or can be replaced by several individual rotor element segments. A positivedisplacement pump of this type is disclosed, for example, in U.S. Pat. No. 4,073,102, in which several individual, axially oscillating rotor element segments are disposed in a pump housing. The oscillating rotor element segments are lined on their top side by a diaphragm which divides a plurality of pump chambers and in which a diaphragm-mounted motor drive unit is disposed with its shaft penetrating through a central region of the diaphragm.
