And even if I had more time, I ended up just getting involved in more projects. But I had a moment where I thought I'd take a minute and finally sit down and write about it and figured it'd be easier than pouring coffee and have time for a few more hours in the day. The behind-the-scenes detail is pretty simple: I decided to make a weapon I could plug in to my Mac with a cable that would sync to my iPad. I'd also set it up so that as I progressed through different levels of difficulty, I'd be able to fire it via an AI and score some points for doing so. I thought it was a great opportunity to try some programming in a different direction. After nearly two months of development, I'm proud of how it turned out. The game is still far from being finished. There's still a ton of content to come. I'll be adding new levels and updates as often as I can. I'm looking forward to future projects and am glad this one came out a bit better than I expected. Requirements: A Mac of some sort The new Mac operating d0c515b9f4
