Continue reading → Russian president Vladimir Putin urged Venezuelan president Hugo Chavez to step down a day before his failed coup on Tuesday, calling the socialist leader an "attempted despot." "[Chavez] does not want to work, and he uses any pretext to stay in power," Putin was quoted as saying in a statement released by the Kremlin. "This is a plan to create a ruling group of populists and keep them there," added the Russian president, whose relationship with the Venezuelan leader has been tense of late. "We have repeatedly warned Mr. Chavez that he should not attempt to play a power game, but it did not help," said Putin. "We don't rule out the possibility of a change of power in Venezuela." Venezuelan state officials early Tuesday described the scenes of the failed coup as "very organized." "The soldier who was [Chavez's] most loyal supporter, made a declaration to the Armed Forces saying that what is happening is a coup against him and the Bolivarian process," said Colombian news agency Efe. "The soldiers joined the fray
