TheÂ .Welcome The Church of St Mary & All Saints is a church of the Diocese of Southwell & Nottingham and a member of the Ecclesia Anglicana movement. We welcome visitors, and are located just off Chapeltown Rd, Ilkeston East Nottinghamshire, NG25 6NG. We are just a short walk from the north side of Ilkeston town centre and a few minutes walk from the city centre. Our church building was built in 1846 and refurbished in 2008. We have a modern and fully integrated audio/visual systems. Our current worship team are: the Revd Stephen Munn, the Revd Jonathan Reekie and Revd Mark Cropper.In "Seeing the Unseen" in her book "Astrophysics for People in a Hurry," Carl Sagan noted that during the previous century, the idea that planets might be uncommon in the heavens was given its most vivid description by the Yerkes-Doolittle Observatory in the 1890s, where the astronomer C. Henry Robertson made an astonishing "discovery" of the night sky by searching for nebulae. When Robertson looked up at the stars, he found what he had not anticipated: Little planets. These were tiny clouds of gas and dust swept up in the friction of the galaxy. An unfamiliar word for him to find, nebulae, was the old term for the burnt-out galaxies, expanding and condensing at speeds that were then inconceivable to humankind. This was no longer a proper description, Robertson thought, for what we saw in the sky as stars or nebulae. Little did Robertson know at the time that astronomers would soon become so certain of their existence. The worlds as he saw them were conventional, knowing planets of the sort we see around other stars. But had there been other planets around other stars -- distant planets -- and were they as common as we now think they are? Today's evidence for planet populations is not nearly as fundamental as it was in Robertson's day. But a new study, by the researchers Pau Amaro, a graduate student at the University of Texas, and Gabriel Perez, a graduate student at the University of Barcelona, offers a first tantalizing glimpse of just how ubiquitous planets of the kind we see around stars and planets may be. e79caf774b
