The present invention relates generally to an improved vehicle door system, and more particularly to a sliding side door assembly for a truck or similar type of vehicle. Side sliding doors are commonly used on trucks and other vehicles. Such doors permit easy access to a wide range of vehicle components, including the engine, cargo, and passenger compartments. However, while such doors allow easy access to the various vehicle components, they do not contribute in any way to the aesthetics of the vehicle. Accordingly, there is a need for a side sliding door assembly for a vehicle that enhances the aesthetics of the vehicle. More specifically, there is a need for a side sliding door assembly that is integrated into the vehicle body structure and thereby provides the appearance of a conventional vehicle door. There is also a need for a side sliding door assembly that is capable of being positioned in a plurality of different positions to maximize the visual impact of the assembly on the vehicle. There is also a need for a side sliding door assembly for a vehicle that is capable of varying the viewing angle of the assembly to vary the visual impact of the assembly on the vehicle. There is also a need for a side sliding door assembly for a vehicle that is capable of varying the viewing angle of the assembly between a first position and a second position to change the angle of the assembly and thereby vary the visual impact of the assembly on the vehicle. The present invention is an improved sliding door for a truck or other type of vehicle. The door assembly includes a door frame, an outer panel and a door seal. A lock mechanism is also included in the assembly for selectively locking the door in a closed position. The door frame is mounted to the vehicle body and provides the appearance of a conventional vehicle door. The outer panel is mounted to the door frame and extends outwardly therefrom. The door seal is mounted to the outer panel and is adapted to slide inwardly and outwardly relative to the outer panel. A locking member is included for selectively locking the door seal in one of a plurality of positions. In addition to the main door frame, the door assembly can include one or more auxiliary door frames for enhancing the aesthetics of the door assembly. The auxiliary door frames
