bwindows@gmail.com Can I write a formula that takes an input A and B and returns the number of times A is in the power set of B ? Say I want to write a formula that takes two positive integers A and B , and returns the number of times A is an element of the power set of B . For example, if we take $A = 2$ and $B = [3, 4, 5, 6]$, then I want my formula to return 2 (meaning that the number of times 2 is an element of the power set of B is 2).

Obviously the answer is trivial for small values, but any solutions in Haskell? A: There is a pretty simple solution. One way to conceptualize this is to imagine it as a set. A set consists of elements. The power set of a set is the set of all subsets. The elements of a power set are like the subset and the subset are like the elements. It is a relationship of one subset containing another subset. With your example, you want to count the number of subsets of $\{3, 4, 5, 6\}$ that contain 2 . The first step is to find the subset that contains 2 . To do this, you must consider every subset in the power set of $\{3, 4, 5, 6\}$ and find the single subset that contains 2 . To do this efficiently, you can convert the integers to base-2 representation, then check if all 2 bits are 1 . Here are the results for A in base-10: $2 = 00$ $11 = 101$ $22 = 110$ $33 = 111$ social worker Dr. Sara Subramanian didn't mince words about her reaction to election results. "I am numb," she told India Today TV, saying it was "really, really painful". She said she feared that the results would lead to communal tension, violence and death. "I feel like running to the border of our country and staying there, I don't know what to do," she said. Subramanian - who has lived in India for the last decade - said it was "shocking" to see the verdict of an election that many people saw as a referendum on the past two years of growing instability and polarisation in the country. Mimicking the expression of frustration on the face of BJP leader Rajnath Singh, Subramanian said she felt like “chewing my hands off”. Rajya Sabha Member Dr. Aruna Roy, who was also a resident of Gujarat during the riots there, in 2010, said that this was a time “when we as human beings must realize our responsibility of being there for each other. People who have been practising together for years are sitting in their homes as if nothing has happened.” She said that for the last two years she had not been able to sleep without “wondering what will happen when a communal wave will hit us again.” Though she didn’t express anything concrete, Roy said she felt that the Congress and other parties that opposed the Modi-led government for most of its tenure were isolated and didn’t have enough of a presence in society. “It wasn’t a fight between the poor and the rich, it was a fight between a large section of the society and the government,” she said. She recalled that she had taken to the streets in the 1990s, by then an active student leader of the Congress, to prevent the then-government from clobbering the opposition that had just swept into power. "I am not afraid to go to that platform again," she said. "Somehow
