The exercise asks to define the Factoring or Miller-Rabin problem, and to show the computational complexity of the problem. The book gives the following explanation: Factoring is a standard problem in cryptography. Suppose we have integers  $n$  and  $m$ , and we wish to know whether  $n$  is equal to a product of  $m$  and smaller than or equal to  $m$ , i.e., whether  $n = m^n$ . It turns out that the computational complexity of this problem is  $\Theta(\log m)$  bits, so that we can solve it in polynomial time. However, Factoring is not hard to compute, but if you use the obvious algorithm, then it works with an exponential probability. The trick is that we can exhibit an integer  $n$  of  $x$  bits with probability  $1 - \epsilon$
