Approaches to the intracellular location of site A of the mitochondrial NADH dehydrogenase complex: photometric studies on the regulation of the site by proteolytic digestion. Previous studies have shown that site A, the regulatory site of the mitochondrial NADH dehydrogenase complex, can be specifically photoinactivated by a covalently-bound cyanine dye, 3-[(6-chromophenyl)thio]-2,5-dihydrothiophene-2,5-dicarbonitrile (CDHP). We have extended these studies and studied the location of site A in the intact mitochondrial membrane. We show that the site of site A is intact and accessible on the protein surface of the mitochondrial membrane when the NADH dehydrogenase is present in the mitochondrial membrane, but that the site is inaccessible to the probe when the dehydrogenase is denatured by treatment with trypsin and urea or by heating in alkali. We then demonstrate that site A is specifically photolabile in the intact mitochondrial membrane and that the extent of photolabilitation in vitro is dependent on the extent of proteolysis in the cells. We have also shown that the kinetics of photolabilitation of the site are markedly slower than those for NADH dehydrogenase inhibitors, suggesting that a site is involved in the binding of the inhibitor.Q: The question is about something so incredible that its subject rarely gets the chance to experience it A memorable example I once heard goes like this: "The question is about something so incredible that its subject rarely gets the chance to experience it." I just don't know how to put it in this context. Any suggestions? A: Another phrase which may fit is The question is about something so amazing that its subject rarely gets the chance to experience it. Edit: This is one of those ambiguous statements which I like to use on occasion. As someone 6d1f23a050
