Twitter CEO Jack Dorsey has effectively apologized for the company's handling of political interference on its platform. In a letter posted to Twitter and reported by TechCrunch, Dorsey explained that his company failed to support the "overwhelming majority" of tweets sent from its platform by the Russian-linked troll farm known as the Internet Research Agency (IRA). "As we have said, IRA is a Russian organization aimed at amplifying divisiveness. We were not aware of their activities when we became aware of their behavior on Twitter in late 2016," Dorsey wrote. "We didn't catch everything, and while we're sincerely sorry for that, we also don't want to be responsible for any state-backed information operation that we didn't catch." Dorsey said that Twitter's challenge was to respond to the fake news campaigns, which included a tweet supposedly sent by President Trump congratulating the Boston Marathon bombing suspects for injuring so many people, from 1.5 million to 2 million tweets sent out over the 2016 election cycle. Dorsey said that most of these tweets were "spam or automation," but that some were sent by accounts that "trolled and harassed." He said that Twitter's response to IRA was "too slow," and that the company did not adequately identify or suspend their accounts or those of their followers. Dorsey explained that the company does not have a complete record of what was tweeted by the
