What happens if I right click a message in AIM and select "Reply?" For example, if I receive an instant message on my phone, I can press the right button and select "Reply". What happens then? I've been using AIM for years, but I've never seen the actual response. I don't want to ask the question if I don't know the answer. A: It will "reply" to the message that is currently selected. If you have multiple people in your chat, it may send out a copy to the other person that is selected. is only the presence of cytokeratin in cell somas, which distinguishes them from other non-epithelial cell types. This is a good argument for the use of this antibody in immunohistochemistry, where other tissues can be contaminated by exudates or only scattered. Thus, the presence of cytokeratin can be used to verify the epithelial origin of a sample; however, the location of the cytokeratin within the cells is not useful because it is a characteristic of the cells (i.e. epithelia) and not necessarily a property of the specific cell line. For example, connective tissue fibroblasts express cytokeratin, but the cells do not necessarily have a "cytokeratin clock." The epithelium is also distinctive from connective tissue cells in that keratohyalin granules (which occur in the upper strata of the cells) tend to disappear during keratinization. In contrast, connective tissue fibroblasts have keratohyalin granules which persist after keratinization. In cytology specimens (i.e. smears of cells), the presence of mitosis is a strong indicator of malignancy because it is an indication of rapid cellular division. However, there are cases in which viable cells with tumor-like features can be observed in a specimen which has a cytologic diagnosis of in situ carcinoma, with no evidence of invasion. If cellular features other than mitosis are responsible for the diagnosis of in situ carcinoma, the diagnosis would no longer be accurate. Therefore, a diagnosis of in situ carcinoma 6d1f23a050
