Founded in 1979, the Harry Potter series of books is a narrative written by J. Langdon in a series of seven parts of around 50,000 words each, or twice as long as the Bible.[1]

The series was written in four years, beginning in October 1999, and published by Bloomsbury from 2000 to 2007, after which time the literary rights were acquired by Bloomsbury subsidiary Scholastic UK. The books' first US edition, edited by Walter and Shawn Rosenblatt and published by Scholastic Press, was released on October 6, 2001. The books' first audiobook edition was recorded by Stephen Fry in August 2004, and a companion book of readers' commentary was released in December 2004. The seven novels follow the fictional story of the protagonists Harry Potter, his friends and enemies, and his experiences at the fictional Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry. Alongside the Harry Potter franchise, there have been a number of film sequels and prequels, with a spin-off novel series, based on the events that occur after the finale of the series. Novels written before the films were made are excluded from the list. Music in Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince Music plays an important role in the Harry Potter universe, even if it is only a background motif. For example, the Hogwartian dragon in the "Three Broomsticks" as well as the Shrieking Shack belong to an Order of the Phoenix. However, the sea or a waterfall adds to the emotional or atmosphere of a scene. Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows uses an original musical score composed by Michael Giacchino. The score contains a variety of sounds including birdcalls, machine, owls and a phoenix. Music was performed by the British national military choirs, The Royal Army Medical Corps and The Royal British Legion Para Choir. Giacchino composed and orchestrated the score while touring British military bases to meet with soldiers to better understand what they wanted to hear during the Harry Potter films. It has been suggested that the name for the Irish music group Dolores O'Riordan, which means "little dark one", was a tribute to Michael Giacchino. The beginning of Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone, has the Harry walking down the stairs in the tower of Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry
