So he emphasized the scientific approach. Emile Durkheim tried to separate sociology from other subjects in the social sciences, and also tried to give a definition of social reality, and it was one of the most important attempts to define social reality. He was the first to propose the idea that social laws are not the result of random events, but are laws that can be proven. He was also the first to propose the idea that social facts and laws are social facts because they matter, that is, they have value. Durkheim was a very consistent and meticulous social researcher.
